Brant Arnold of Savannah is co-starring in a "nitrous-filled" pilot show, "The Fastest Cars in the Dirty South," which aired on Sept. 18, on the Velocity channel. The pilot show can be seen on the Motortrend app now.

Those familiar with drag racing know nitrous makes an average engine extraordinarily fast.

It was the first reality racing show launched globally, with 160,000 views world-wide.

The show features a group of drag racers from Muscle Shoals, Alabama and Savannah, Tennessee.

The reality show originated as an idea by Eric Malone of Muscle Shoals, Alabama, who passed it along to Arnold, who, in turn, passed it on to friend and producer Nate Starck.

Starck came to Muscle Shoals and filmed a sizzle reel—a short promotional video—to pitch to the network. The race itself took place at Jackson Dragway, in Jackson, Tennessee.

"The network loved it," said

Arnold. "These guys push to build the fastest cars in the dirty South."

In addition to Arnold and Malone, the seven-man team includes Mikie Smith, Britt Berryhill, Dayne Hearn, Jamie Wayne and Kenny Baker.

The characters take the slowest car from another racing group, upgrade it, then race them back with it against the other group's fastest car.

"Sometimes we bet for the car we've upgraded," said Arnold. "At other times, if the other racing team wins, they get the car's upgrades for free. And if Malone's team wins, the other team pays them for the upgrades."

"More episodes to come," said Arnold.

Arnold is a 1996 Hardin

County High School graduate. He has been building and racing cars for 20 years. When not filming, he is racing his 1934 Ford, three window, coupe named Dillinger, at Open Outlaw races around the Midsouth. Arnold is married to Christy. They have two children who also race, Landon and Aliyah. Their other children are Emily, Jesse and Lane.
