Friday night football Pink Out/Senior Night

By Beth Williams

Friday, October 13, was CCHS final home football game of the season, also known as senior pink out night for our football, cheer and band members.

The stadium was packed with everyone wearing pink as we honored all who have battled breast cancer.

The game started off strong and ended in a 47-54 loss against Lakeland Pure Academy.

The community says thank you to Van Kalinisan and senior Samuel Kalinisan for putting the pink out night together. They raised enough money to cover the cost for all sports at Crockett High School to wear pink on senior night.

All seniors including football, cheer and band were recognized and are as follows:

Football Seniors- Grant Carroll, Landon Wicker, Dylon Pigue, Braden Park, Antuan Hobson, Carsen Pruitt, Mordecai Vaughn, Joseph Gould, Kevin Garduno, Samuel Kalinisan, Clarence Lutten, Ethan Allen, Kentravion Price, Preston Vernon, and Jordan Rainey.

Senior Cheerleaders- Sydnee King, Carmen Jelks, Ameila Pankey, Karly Pigue, Jasmine Anderson,

Deputy graduates from Tennessee law enforcement training academy

September 29, 2023 was an exciting day for Crockett County's newest deputy. Deputy Will Dearing shined in Donaldson and represented Crockett County Sheriff's Department (CCSD) with the highest honor.

After earning a Bachelor of Science in Criminal Justice from Freed Hardeman University, he began working for the sheriff's office and earned the opportunity to be sponsored by CCSD to become a P.O.S.T. Certified Law Enforcement Officer.

After 12 hard, long weeks away from all familiar people and "creature comforts", Deputy Dearing successfully completed the rigorous requirements of the Basic Police Academy.

With comprehensive exams every week that must be passed in order to proceed, civil law, criminal law, use of force, mental health, high-risk operations, felony stops, emergency vehicle operations, corrections, survival, gangs, illegal drugs, search warrants, officer fitness, courtroom testimony, and a host of other topics are covered during the 12 weeks.

Deputy Dearing stated his favorite part was the law classes.

"We are proud of all your accomplishments and welcome you to our team as the newest certified officer in our department," said Sheriff Troy Klyce. "Be safe and always do the right thing."

Practice writing in runes. Rewrite each of the following words with runes. Then spell each of your spelling words in runes!

Meet the BERSERKERS!

The most ferocious Viking warriors were called Berserkers. (That's where the phrase "going berserk" comes from.)

Standards Link: Language Arts: Vocabulary. Understand the origins and meaning of words in English.

Who were the Viking warriors?

Long ago, a people called Vikings lived in what is now Norway, Sweden and Denmark. Rocks and thin soil made it difficult for Vikings to grow crops or raise animals for food. The people were often hungry.

Some Vikings even tried to live in America. In 1002 (more than 400 years before Columbus), a Viking called Leif (pronounced "leaf") Ericson landed with a group of people and set up a village in North America.

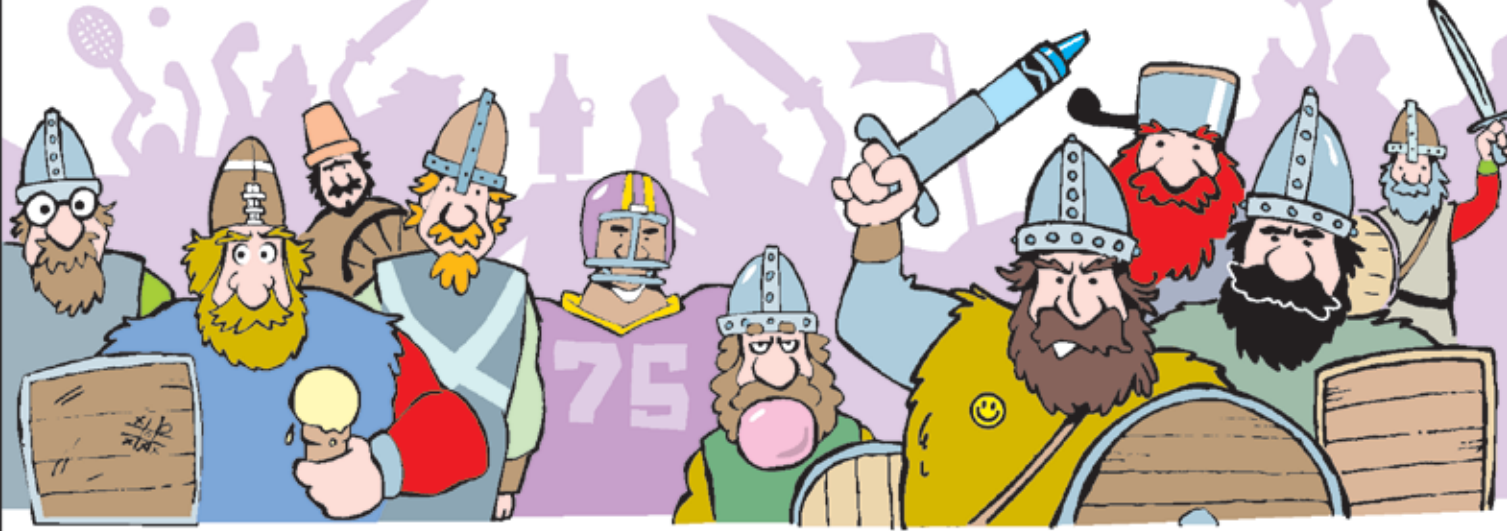

They stayed about two years. Difficult conditions forced them to leave.

Standards Link: History: Explain the aims, obstacles and accomplishments of the explorers.

In 1016, a Viking became king of England. His name was King Cnut. He was a wise ruler who brought peace.

Viking men built ships and sailed to England and France. There they attacked towns, robbed them of food and took prisoners. Sometimes they stayed and took over the towns. At one time, the Vikings ruled most of what is now England and the Normandy area of France.

How many silly things can you find in this bunch of Berserkers?

Explorer Report
Pretend you are a news reporter on a trip with a group of explorers. Write a news report about what you are exploring. Be sure to tell who, what, when, where, why and how.

Rune Code

The letters in the Viking alphabet are called runes. The word rune means secret in their language. Use the runes to find out why the letters were called secret.

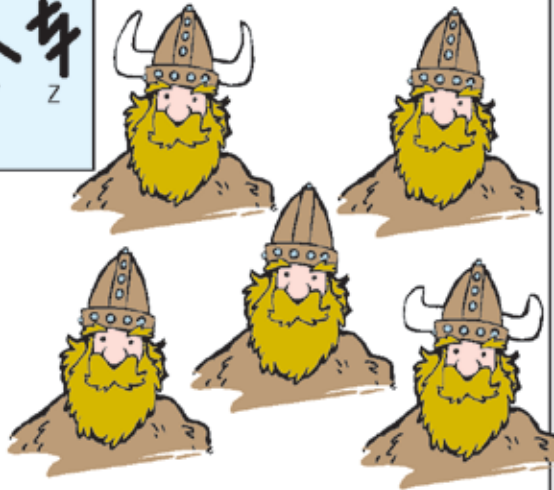

Vikings didn't have paper and ink. Messages were carved in wood or stone. That is why the runes are made of straight lines only; curves are hard to carve.

Viking Helmets

You have probably seen comic strips or movies that show Viking helmets with horns. But most Viking experts doubt that Viking helmets actually had horns.

Can you find the two Vikings that are identical?

This animal was brought along on many Viking sea journeys. If the captain of the ship lost his way, he would let this animal go. It always headed toward land, showing the Vikings which way to go. FEATURES FROM THE BIBLE
 TRUTH IN SCRIPTURE
Tiglath-Pileser or Pul, King of Assyria
 2 Kings 15, 16; II Chronicles 28

Pul (Tiglath-Pileser) king of Assyria invaded the land of Israel during the reign of Menahem and Menahem gave him a thousand talents of silver to gain his support and strengthen his own hold on the kingdom.

While Pekah was king of Israel, Tiglath-Pileser (Pul) came and took Ijon, Abel Beth Maacah, Janoah, Kedesh and Hazor. He took Gilead and Galilee, including all the land of Naphtali, and deported the people to Assyria. When Ahaz was king of Judah and Israel, and Aram had joined forces against him he sent messengers to tell Tiglath-Pileser, “I am your servant and vassal. Come up and save me out of the hand of the king of Aram and of the king of Israel, who are attacking me.”

Ahaz then took the silver and gold found in the temple of the LORD and in the treasuries of the royal palace and sent it as a gift to king Tiglath-Pileser of Assyria. The king of Assyria came to Ahaz's aid and attacked Damascus, captured it and deported its inhabitants to Kir and put Rezin king of Aram to death. When the Edomites and Philistines attacked Judah, Tiglath-Pileser king of Assyria came to him, but he gave him trouble instead of help.

Fright night

FROM THE DESK OF CLAYBURN PEEPLES

Circuit Court Judge Crockett, Gibson, & Haywood Counties

We started our holiday movie watching a little early this year. Every fall, leading up to Christmas, we watch a dozen or so, sometimes more, old, classic holiday movies, and we usually begin on Halloween night, right after the trick-or-treaters have gone.

Our college daughter won't be home on Halloween this year, however, but she was here last weekend, so we began this year's sequence early.

The movie we always watch on Halloween is Meet Me in St. Louis. If you're familiar with it, you may think of it as a Christmas movie, because of a scene in which Judy Garland sings "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas," but the movie also has a fairly lengthy Halloween scene, and we always begin our annual holiday movie extravaganza with it.

But as I was watching it Saturday night, I was struck by how different the movie's depiction of kids' Halloween activities was from the way kids treat the holiday today. They were actually more rambunctious and set on mischief than they are today.

The reason things were portrayed so differently in the movie was that in 1903, when the movie was set, Halloween was only vaguely similar to the candy bucket bacchanalia it is now.

The main difference I noticed was that no one was trick-or-treating. That's because there was no such thing in 1903. Halloween was not then considered a night to extort candy, but mainly one with a free ticket for mischief and vandalism. Kids did wear costumes back then, always homemade, but only to disguise their identities when pulling their pranks.

Trick-or-treating didn't become a widespread custom in America until the 1930s, but it did have ancedents in pre-Christian Celtic lands some 2,000 years ago. It seems the Celts believed that spirits of the dead returned to earth on October 31 each year, the date of the pagan holiday of Samhain.

To drive these spirits away, people disguised themselves in animal skins and sometimes left food on their doorsteps to placate them. Then, in the Middle Ages, people began dressing as demons and ghosts and wandered from house to house performing antics in exchange for food and drink.

After Christianity came to Celtic lands, sometime around the eighth or ninth century, the church designated November 1 as All Saints' Day, and then later, November 2 as All Souls Day, and the Christian celebrations around these days featured pretty much the same traditions that Samhain had.

Sometimes, poor people would practice what was called "souling," by knocking on doors and asking for gifts of food, money, or drink in exchange for praying for the household's departed relatives.

Still later, young people in Ireland and Scotland began wearing disguises on what would become Halloween night and performing tricks and telling jokes from house to house, in exchange for treats, which typically consisted of fruits, nuts, or coins.

But it was the mischievous traditions of the holiday that took hold in America. In the beginning, these pranks were relatively innocent and were limited to rural areas, but as metropolitan areas expanded, so did opportunities for pranks, which became more destructive and dangerous over time. Moving manhole covers from streets, deflating tires, and posting fake detour signs were common. Then came glass breaking, fire setting and physical assault.

By the 1930s, public anger over the vandalism reached the boiling point after Halloween night in 1933 when hundreds of boys across the country flipped over cars, sawed off telephone poles and engaged in thousands of acts of vandalism.

Newspapers angrily referred to the evening as Black Halloween, a reference to the stock market crash four years earlier on Black Tuesday, and some cities considered banning the holiday, but in most places Black Halloween led to adoption of alternative ways for young people to "let off steam" during the evening. Parents and church leaders held costume parades and organized trick or treat parties using a brand-new term in the process. Somebody even came up with the wild idea of building simulated haunted house attractions to keep the kids busy.

At first these "haunted houses" were small, local affairs, held in basements or community centers, but as time went on, charitable and fraternal organization began to see a profit potential in hosting their own haunted houses for fundraising purposes.

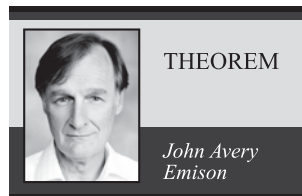

Most were screaming successes, and today there are estimated to be more than 1,200 admission charging haunted attractions and who knows how many small-scale haunts produced by parents and schools.

But the big story of Halloween today is about the candy. The idea of trick-or-treating, begun as an antidote to violence in the 1930s, with its "treats" consisting of fruits, cookies or other homemade items, was only a modest success, and even that ended when World War II came with its sugar rationing and blackouts, but boy, did it ever come back with a vengeance after the war, as major candy makers convinced the country that nothing but candy would do for trick-or-treating.

Today, Halloween is an American institution, one Americans will spend a record-setting, mind boggling, $12.2 billion this year, $3.6 billion on candy alone, says the National Retail Federation.

Now that's really scary.

Charles Rosenfelder, an inspiring Christian and Tennessee football legend

THEOREM

John Avery Emison

If you missed the personal testimony of faith by Charles Rosenfelder at the First Christian Church in Alamo last Sunday, you missed an inspiring moment brought to you by one of the greatest football players ever to wear the orange and white. Charlie, as he calls himself, told his story of Christian faith growing up in Humboldt and attending the University of Tennessee-Knoxville. Except, he almost wasn't a Tennessee Volunteer because Bear Bryant assembled an all-star cast of Ken Stabler, Joe Namath, and others to recruit him on his visit to the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa. Thankfully for Vols fans a young head coach by the name of Doug Dickey convinced him to make Neyland Stadium his home field.

Afterwards, my wife Judy and I were invited to lunch with Charlie Rosenfelder at the home of Jim and Carol Barraza. There we discussed sports and some of the interesting highlights of his years in a Volunteer football uniform. One of the high points was Tennessee's victory in the Gator Bowl on New Year's Eve 1966. Although Tennessee lost three games in the regular season, including a 1-point loss to Alabama (11-10) late in the year, they were invited to play Syracuse University in the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla. For Tennessee it was the second straight bowl appearance for the first time in 10 years. The previous year they beat Tulsa in the Bluebonnet Bowl (which was discontinued in 1987).

Charlie Rosenfelder pointed out that Syracuse had two of the best running backs in college football that year: Floyd Little and Larry Czonka. "But we knew if we could get ahead of them they would not be able to catch up by running the ball." Tennessee took the early lead with a field goal in the first quarter and a second field goal and two touchdowns in the second quarter. Tennessee missed both extra points but held an 18-0 lead at halftime. Tennessee had its lead and hung on for dear life as Syracuse stormed back in the second half scoring its second touchdown with only 46 seconds left in the game to pull within six at 18-12. Syracuse gained 348 yards on the ground against the Vols, an amount that is virtually unheard of today.

The next season the Volunteers were undefeated in the SEC and lost only the opening game to UCLA by 4 points. The #2 Vols were matched in the 1968 Orange Bowl against #3 Oklahoma that turned out to be a reverse of prior year's Gator Bowl. This time the Vols were dead in the water in the first half and watched the Sooners open a 19-0 lead. Tennessee roared back but came up short 26-24.

The 1969 Cotton Bowl was one of the worst defeats by the Volunteers in a bowl game. They were behind the Texas Longhorns 28-0 at halftime, losing 36-13. "We were out there the whole week and it never got above freezing," Rosenfelder said. "That was the coldest I've ever been." But the Vols were pretty hot during Rosenfelder's the three years of playing eligibility (freshmen could not play their first year). They finished 25-6-1 those three years, which is an outstanding record no matter how you cut it. Interestingly, I happen to be in attendance at the only game Tennessee tied during Charlie Rosenfelder's years, a 17-17 game with Georgia. Tennessee was behind 9-17 and scored a touchdown on the final play of the game as the clock expired, making it 15-17 Georgia. The Vols tied the game with a 2-point conversion.

There were two "firsts" in Neyland Stadium that day. It was the first game on artificial turf, or "Doug's rug," as it was dubbed after coach Doug Dickey. "Tartan Turf," a product of 3M, was installed on Shields-Watkins Field in the summer and stayed in some version for 26 years. The other "first" was the debut of the golden and beloved voice of the Volunteers, John Ward. He and his color commentator Bill Anderson announced every game for 32 years, never missing even one. In my mind I can still hear him shout: "Give Him Six!"

It was great to have Charlie Rosenfelder in Alamo, and great to hear his statement of faith. I'll see you on down the trail.

A vision of...

KEVIN'S CORNER

Kevin Stone

"I don't wanna go!" I said. My seven-year-old whine didn't deter my two older sisters, however.

"Oh, come on. Don't be a baby. It's really fun. There's squirrels." Pam and Mary Ann shot each other a sly smile at one another. Fun for them, maybe. Me? Probably not. Going into the thick woods across from our house in the late afternoon didn't seem like fun to me. In the sunlight of full day it was alive with the sounds of animals and trees blowing in the wind. On this October day, as the sun began to sink below the horizon, it was full of mysterious noises and shadows. The wind was up and made the shadows dance. I was just a tad scared. My sisters had insisted that they had found something, and wanted me to see it, too. How could I resist? I was being included in an adventure. That's a pretty big deal when you're seven. So, I went.

We trudged through the underbrush of twigs and fallen leaves, our sneakers getting wet in the damp foliage. They walked too fast for me, as always. We walked for what seemed to me to be a long time. I was about to ask them how much longer when I noticed that they had stopped in front of a fence. It was only about two feet high, made of very old wrought iron and shaped like a rectangle. Inside the rectangle was a single tombstone. They had led me to a grave. The marker was very old. It read: Kevin Kemp 1846-1865 and below it was an inscription that read "post tenebras spero lucem". They pointed to the name.

"Look, it's your name! You're dead." They both thought that was funny. I was fairly freaked out by even being close to a grave with my given name on it, much less being in the dark woods with it. My sisters opened the gate at the foot of the enclosed burial site, and it creaked slightly, just like in spooky movies. They walked inside. Turning to me they waved me on. Uh oh.

"Old Mister Kemp said this is his great uncle's grave. He fought in the Civil War and was badly wounded in the face." I walked inside with them, listening and looking at the writing on the stone, wondering what the words on the bottom meant.

"He said that an explosion blinded him at the battle of Spring Hill. He lived but couldn't see. Mr. Kemp says that he was the meanest blind man you could imagine. He hated people because he couldn't see. Then, one day, they found him out here in the woods. He'd hanged himself. He left a note that said, 'Anyone who visits the site of my passing must pass me their sight'. Mr. Kemp said that the spot in front of the tombstone is the exact spot they found him, and that if you stood there, and closed your eyes, you could see out of Kevin Kemp's eyes. No one does, because he was so mean, they just knew he'd went to Hell." I was now officially terrified. The wind howled through the trees suddenly and a large branch above us broke off and fell. It landed right onto my head. I fell and my right eye grazed the corner of the stone on the way to the ground. I lay there for a second, dazed. My wide-eyed sisters pulled the heavy branch from my back and helped me up. My eye was full of blood. From below us came a blood-curdling sound like someone saying "Ahhhhh!", then a low, sad, crying sound. We forgot my injury and just ran for home. Behind us, a sound like a scream under a blanket shot through the woods. My sisters and I made it home in record time.

When we caught our breath, I realized I couldn't see out of my right eye. It wasn't just the blood. I was taken to doctors who said there had been an infection in the nerves. The eye would have to be removed or it would infect both eyes. I've lived my life since then with a prosthetic (glass) eye.

Our parents were sure we'd just made it all up to cover up the fact that we weren't supposed to be in the woods at night. They never had to worry about us breaking that particular rule again. We moved away not long after that, but there were many times, when we were playing in the yard, that we were sure that we heard that same "Ahhhhh" sound, followed by crying. I never went into those woods again. I figured I got off pretty easy. Having one eye is better than none. Or one that only sees the torments of the Underworld.

We asked Old Man Kemp about the inscription on the stone. He said it was latin. It meant "After darkness, I hope for light". It would seem that his mean old great uncle got at least half his sight back. I'm not sure he enjoyed it much; from the sounds we heard that October evening. Some things aren't meant to be seen with the eyes of the living.
